You work as a travel agent on $42,500 per year. You are on job keeper and as your agency does a lot of domestic travel you are confident the job will survive.	Patricia hasn't worked since she came to Australia.
Relationship History Considerations: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> You met Patricia on holidays in the Philippines shortly after your previous marriage broke up. You married Patricia seven years ago in order to bring her to Australia on a spouse visa. The early years of the marriage were wonderful. Patricia did everything for you but things have deteriorated and you want a divorce. You want to make sure that it isn't as expensive as last time. You are worried that Patricia will go back to the Philippines with Donny as she is very close to her family. You have made all of the financial contributions to the marriage and also sent money back to her family. Thousands of dollars as well as trips back to see her family. You never wanted Patricia to work as she had you and Donny to care for and she was a field hand in the Philippines. You suppose she can get a job in a factory or something now. You expect that Donny will continue to live with Patricia although you want to be able to see him and spend time with him.
Children: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Donny – 5 years old Susie – 16 (from your previous marriage) You did have week about care until Susie was 15 and since then whenever she feels like it.
Issues: You think that the property settlement should be in your favour because you brought everything into the relationship. You went to see a lawyer after the pre-mediation session, and he said that it would actually be a larger percentage to her if it went to court because she has the primary care for Donny. One thing that really resonated with you that the lawyer said was "Don't you want her well set up so that she can continue to care for Donny and not need to return to the Philippines?" Your proposal is to borrow some money against the house to pay her out and give her some super. She doesn't drive so the car and boat would be of no use for her.
Legal and other Advice: The lawyer said up to 60% in Patricia's favour but you would like to make a proposal less than that. Your borrowing capacity is up to $125,000 which would be payments of $842 per month over 15 years.
